

presents a reading by four emerging Latino and Latina California poets represented in the new anthology,

The Wind Shifts: New Latino Poetry, edited by Francisco Aragón (University of Arizona Press, 2007):

Adela Najarro holds an MFA and a Ph.D. in literature and creative writing and teaches at Cabrillo College as part of the Puente Project, supporting Latinidad and preparing students to transfer to four-year colleges and universities. Her extended family's emigration from Nicaragua began in the 1940s. She has published poems in numerous journals, including Notre Dame Review, Nimrod International Journal of Poetry & Prose, Blue Mesa Review, Crab Orchard Review, ACM: Another Chicago Magazine, Artful Dodge, and Cimarron Review.

David Dominguez is the author of Work Done Right (University of Arizona Press, 2003) and Marcoli Sausage (Chicano Chapbook Series, 2000). His poems have appeared on Poetry Daily, in El Andar, Askew, Bloomsbury Review, Border Senses Literary Magazine (fall 2008), Crab Orchard Review, Faultline, In the Grove, Pachuco Children Hurl Stones, Palabra: A Magazine of Chicano and Literary Art (fall 2008), and Solo, and in anthologies including The Bear Flag Republic, Alcatraz Editions, (2008). He teaches composition and poetry writing at Reedley College.

John Olivares Espinoza's poetry has been published in various journals, anthologies, and chapbooks. Bilingual Press will publish his first full-length collection of poems, The Date Fruit Elegies, this summer. A native of Southern California, John received his MFA from Arizona State University and currently teaches writing and literature at The National Hispanic University in San Jose.
